

World map showing the geographic distribution of first-author records. The map uses a color scale from light pink to dark purple to represent the number of records per country. The United States and Australia show the highest counts (darkest purple), while most other countries show lower counts (lighter shades).

[illegible]